

Introduction.

Ever-since the first man appeared on the surface of the earth, he was shrouded with certain essential and fundamental rights that are essence of the man which makes him a human. The human rights are derived to fortify the human race. These rights are emerged as protective shield against injustice in any form. To make the human rights more meaningful these are woven around the life, liberty, health, shelter, and safe environment of human being and are given a wider and broader dimension that incorporate to make every human life safe and comfortable.

The development of a nation is gauged on the scale of education which leads to economic, social and other developments. To achieve such multifaceted goals, it is essentially important to imbibe the value of human rights. Besides the diversities of our country in terms of region, culture and language, the socio-economic background of the region affects the very mindset of the people which needs to be addressed and taught with much more sensitivity and indulgence. Creation of strong and pro-active human rights culture has been long overdue in India. There is a gulf between human rights education and its implication in day to day life. In order to bridge this gulf, there is a need to devise a mechanism so as not only to change the mindset of the Youngers, but also to imbibe human rights value and traditions and help students to develop positive attitude towards the human rights per-se. They should be informed and realised of mutual respect towards the rights of others, brotherhood, peaceful coexistence etc. In order to achieve the objective to sensitise the society towards human rights and also to create a human rights culture.

Dayanand College of Law resolves to establish a centre for advancement of human rights and thus established “Human Rights Education Centre” in 2011.
